

Multiplication is the name of the game and each generation just plays it the same.

So what is happening in New South Wales alone for 14,482 couples or 28,964 individuals in 2006 to have their marriages legally terminated by divorce and separation after being together on average for 7.6 years.

Immediately we identify a direct relationship with financial pressure and interest rates.

Maybe in this study we have actually found an explanation for the foundation of the "7 year itch", however we would like to offer an opportunity to actually study just what is happening in your relationship and why you or your partner think separation will make either or both of you happy.

Yes, sure you will be able to come and go and spend time and money as you please.

But what exactly is it that you think your partner is doing to you which will change in you when the offending partner is out of your life

How will their absence change what is happening in you?

How do you know that your next relationship will be different to the one you think you are NOT having now?

Maybe your thinking the first few years were a honey moon period, then you started realising that things were not always so 'rosy'.

Then you started comparing yourself to others in relationships which seemed happier, freer, more enjoyable, argument and stress free coupling.

Naturally dissent begins to accumulate as intuitive self protective mechanisms close down the stimulation of excitement from that once sensed lovin' feeling.

Lost to the sense of anxiety and rejection polarity rising as you hear those familiar foot steps approaching the front door or when the callers number appeared in your phone.

Even the dog picks up the vibe and moves to the laundry door for quick exit.

So just what is happening with you two who once enjoyed walking in the rain because you missed the last train home?

Would you like to understand what has happened to two really good long term friends, would you?

So that you can get to know yourself better and find real joy and happiness in yourself without expecting your partner to deliver you to your happy place.

Have you ever considered the possibility of any expectation of anybody or any thing setting you up for disappointment if it did not eventuate?

Here is a great old story to teach and explain about attachment.
